

North Carolina Medical Center Resources

A woman who has received information from the physician performing her pregnancy ultrasound that her fetus may have a disability or serious abnormality may wish to contact one of the medical centers listed below. These medical centers have specialists who are highly trained to diagnose, treat and provide counseling about any form of high risk pregnancy. These are not the only medical centers in North Carolina where high risk prenatal care can be received, but these are the centers that have traditionally been identified as serving women with the highest risk pregnancies.
